SECTION C  (10 MARKS)

Read the following passage very carefully and then answer the questions that follow.

In the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, migrants from both Luba and Lunda Kingdoms came and settled in Zambia. Generally they were shifting cultivators looking for new land. They had many reasons for migrating. The population of Katanga was still growing, there was a shortage of arable land. The Portuguese, who arrived on the coast in the fifteenth century brought many new crops from America. Maize, Cassava, groundnuts and others. These crops either exhausted the soil more quickly than traditional crops or could only be grown on the more fertile land, which naturally increased the pressure on such land.

The Luba-Lunda people also had political reasons for migrating. Conquered chiefs, for instance, migrated so as to maintain their independence or to escape punishment after an unsuccessful rebellion.

Some migrants were losers in a succession dispute, others were persons suspected of practicing witchcraft. Some were involved in family quarrels, as was believed to be the case with the Bemba and Bisa. Others simply wanted to escape taxation or the slave trade.

Some were traders who wanted to set up their own trading connecitions rather than go on paying tribute to a central king, others were merely adventurers looking for good land.
